Restriction Requirement

Restriction to one of the following inventions is required under 35 U.S.C. 121:

- I. Claims 1, 27, and 28, drawn to a type I restriction-modification enzyme, classified in class 435, subclass 183.
- II. Claims 2-15, drawn to a molecular motor system, classified in class 536, subclass 23.1.
- III. Claims 16-26, drawn to a method of translocating a substance, classified in class 435, subclass 6.

1. Groups I and II are related as combination and subcombination. Inventions in this relationship are distinct if it can be shown that (1) the combination as claimed does not require the particulars of the subcombination as claimed for patentability, and (2) that the subcombination has utility by itself or in other combinations (MPEP § 806.05(c)). In the instant case, the combination (the molecular motor system of group II) as claimed does not require the particulars of the subcombination (the enzyme of group I) as claimed because there are a plurality of enzymes and mechanisms other than the enzyme of group I that can satisfy the limitations recited for the method of group II. For example, transfer RNA is a nucleic acid to which is bound a substance that is translocated as a result of the translocation of the nucleic acid. This translocation, however, does not involve the enzyme of group I. The subcombination (the enzyme of group I) has separate utility such as detection of nucleic acids in a sample or protection of nucleic acids from degradation by restriction endonucleases. Because of the relationship between the groups, a literature search for the enzyme of group I would not be co-extensive with a literature search for the molecular motor system of group II.

2. Groups I and III are related as product and process of use. The inventions can be shown to be distinct if either or both of the following can be shown: (1) the process for using the product as claimed can be practiced with another materially different product or (2) the product as claimed can be used in a materially different process of using that product (MPEP § 806.05(h)). In the instant case the enzyme of group I can be used in a plurality of materially different processes than the method of group III including detection of nucleic acids in a sample or protection of nucleic acids from degradation by restriction endonucleases. Because of the relationship between the groups, a literature search for the enzyme of group I would not be co-extensive with a literature search for the method of group III.

3. Groups II and III are related as product and process of use. The inventions can be shown to be distinct if either or both of the following can be shown: (1) the process for using the product as claimed can be practiced with another materially different product or (2) the product as claimed can be used in a materially different process of using that product (MPEP § 806.05(h)). In the instant case the nucleic acid sequence that comprises the molecular motor system can be used in a plurality of materially different processes including use as a PCR primer and to identify DNA binding proteins. Because of the relationship between the groups, a literature search for molecular motor system of group II would not be co-extensive with a literature search for the methods of group III.

4. Because these inventions are distinct for the reasons given above and have acquired a separate status in the art because of their recognized divergent subject matter, restriction for examination purposes as indicated is proper.

5. Applicant is advised that the reply to this requirement to be complete must include an election of the invention to be examined even though the requirement be traversed (37 CFR 1.143).
